F.Y.I.

What is PAL vs. NTSC and why does it matter to me?

A great deal of the new Amiga entertainment software is developed in Europe because of the large established Amiga base on that continent. Many Amiga users use a television set for display instead of a monitor. In Europe the display standard for television is PAL (Phase Alternating Line) which produces 625 lines of resolution (represented by 512 lines on the Amiga). In the United States our television standard is NTSC (National Television Standards Committee) which uses 525 lines of resolution (represented by 486 lines on the Amiga). A game written for PAL in Europe will not work on a NTSC television set here in the United States. However, some game programmers write a PAL "boot" disk that you load first and then the game works fine if you use a monitor. A monitor displays PAL with the boot disk, however there is no way of displaying PAL output on an American TV. Look for our new icons above the new games. The PAL icon will signify a PAL only game in which you will need a monitor to display the software. If a game doesn't have a PAL icon it will work fine in the NTSC standard (your standard TV set). We hope you enjoy the new games!
